At Exercises

Three hundred years of American high schools was the general
theme of the four orations given by members of the Salem High School
at the 71st annual commencement
last night in the high school auditorium. Diplomas were awarded to 168 seniors, ten more than in last year's class.

Graduates Take Places

Commencement service opened
with the prelude by the high school orchestra, "Western World" (Chester). It was followed by the processional
"Victory" (Zamecnik) during which the class of 84 boys and 84 girls took their places in the auditorium. A group of the seniors were seated in the front rows of the auditorium
due to the limited seating capacity of the stage.

Rev. Charles F. Evans gave the invocation, followed by the first two orations, Donald Hammel on
"The High School as an American-izer," and Joyce Chatfield, "The New Emphasis on Social Studies".

The high school chorus under the direction of Miss Martha Krauss,
music supervisor of schools, offered
two selections.

"Opportunities of the High School" was the subject of the oration
by Harry McCarthy and the concluding address by Mildred Woods concerned "The School of Tomorrow".

A musical feature of the service
was a group of arrangements sung
by the Massillon High school a capella choir, Frederick P. Mullins, president of the board, presented Harry McCarthy, president of the class of 1935, a diploma for the class as a group.

1881 Group Present

Three of the four members of the class of 1881 were present last night
at the exercises, illness preventing the fourth, Mrs. F. W. McCleery
from attending. Mrs. H. H. Sharp of Highland Ave., Miss Nora Hise
of West Liberty, Ia., and Mrs. Clara
Parks Thompson of Northfield, Mass., attended the exercises last night 54 years after their high school graduation. All four expect to be present tonight at the annual commencement banquet.

Principal Wilbur J. Springer presided at the class roll call. The exercises closed with the benediction
by Rev. R. D. Walter and the post-lude "On the Hike" (Zamecnik) by the high school orchestra.

sponsoring the Salem Farmers Institute will meet in the Memorial building at 8 p. m. Monday to elect a chairman for the program committee to take charge of the next
institute meeting Jan. 22 and 23, 1936.

Any members of the five granges
interested in the institute are invited to attend the meeting, called by R. R. Shelton, president of the institute.

Kiwanians Meet

Four new members were received yesterday at the monthly business meeting and luncheon of the Salem Kiwanis club at the Memorial building, those taken into the organization being Lewis Smith, Carl Bartholomew and Bartholomew.

Plans were discussed for a steak
dinner at the next meeting, June 10, to be held at the Columbiana Country Club. The annual club picnic will be held July 18.

There were just a few settlements
and these were sparsely populated.
There were approximately 130 high-

were as a whole clergymen. Rev.

this time said "God sifted a whole grain over into this wilderness."
The people were mostly English.

It is little wonder that such people thought of maintenance of edu-

order that "this country would be to not have an illiterate ministry and the citizens would be educated."

there was division in the country.

HIGHWAY BOND
REFUNDER BILL
IS QUESTIONED

Constitutionality Of Ohio
Plans Doubted By Officials

MEASURE BEFORE
GOVERNOR DAVEY

Counties Already Paid Up
Would Have To Continue Paying

(By Associated Press)
COLUMBUS, June 7.—Constitutionality of the Armbruster-Lawrence highway bond refund bill was questioned today by some county officials, legislators and attorneys
as they scanned the provisions of the act.

So wrought up were several of the legislators, who voted for the bill,
that they have appealed to Governor Davey to veto it. The bill was passed in the closing hours of the session and is now before the governor.

County Plan "Steal"

Sen. James M. Matthews (D.
Clark) characterized the measure
as a downright "steal".

Auditors of counties whose bonds
have been paid out, but whose counties must contribute to help pay
the bonds of others, figured they would lose as much as $37,000 and in some cases up to $300,000.

Some lawyers argued the act was unconstitutional because it encroached on or came dangerously
close to violating a constitutional prohibition against the state assuming the obligation of political subdivisions.

The act provides that each and every county, for 15 years after Jan.
1 next, must contribute 10 per cent
of its share to the motor vehicle
tax funds for the retirement of
county, township and municipal
road or highway bonds issued prior
to Jan. 1, 1935.

No less than 19 of the 88 counties
which already have paid off their outstanding bonds would be compelled under the new law to contribute for the next 15 years.

The outstanding bonds to be paid
in the 69 remaining counties estimated to $34,145,775.86 on last Jan. 1, according to figures in the state auditor's office.

Terms of Act
The act, after its final revision, would provide for the refunding of
county, township and municipal
road or highway bonds issued prior
to Jan. 1, 1935, for the construction,
reconstruction, widening or resurfacing of roads or highways by the issuance of 15 year bonds to be paid out of the proceeds from the motor vehicle license tax.

Lisbon Democrats
Select Candidates

LISBON, June 7.—At a meeting
of city Democrats here Thursday night, Earl Richardson was nominated as candidate for mayor,
Floyd Binsley, clerk, and Mrs.
Clara Nevin, treasurer.

The balance of the ticket, it was decided, would be filled in by a committee composed of R. M. Paterson, James Murphy and Jess Wilson.

Another meeting will be held at 8
p. m. Tuesday when the committee will announce names of candidates for the board of public affairs.

Receives Charter

An Ohio charter for the Colum-biana council of Boy Scouts, has been received by Attorney Lodge Riddle of Lisbon, who filed application for the charter several weeks ago.

The charter gives the county organization full rights under incorporation laws. The officers of the county council were the incorporators.

"Rural Life" day service will be held at Willow Grove grange at

Rev. A. R. Anderson of Damascus, who will be the principal speaker.

Music will be furnished by a group
from Damascus and Arnold Lutes
of this city will sing several num-

TRAIN STRIKES
LEETONIA BUS

Carl Varian, Driver, Escapes Injury In Accident Thursday Night

LEETONIA, June 7.—Carl Varian,
of Leetonia, driver of a Salem-Leetonia bus, escaped possible death at 10:18 Thursday night when his bus was nipped by an eastbound
Pennsylvania railroad train No. 28
at the Chestnut street crossing here.

There were no passengers in the machine at the time, and Varian
was preparing to make his 10:30
trip to Salem and return when the accident happened. Only the front end of the bus was damaged.

Varian told authorities that glaring lights from a nearby carnival
and those of a score of automobiles
confused him somewhat and he failed to see Frank Orr, crossing
watchman, signaling him.

Varian had complied with all crossing regulations by stopping but then started across the tracks when the train passed. The bus stood rigid as the engine and all coaches
grazed the front end of the bus,
smashing it and tearing off the
bumper, etc.

Development of a farmer cooperative finance system will be the primary topic for discussion at the meetings but other items of interest to farmers will also be given attention. Important legislative proposals such as rural electrification, the AAA amendments,
and the fight for the party dollar,
are topics to be discussed by the two speakers.

"The state legislature recently
turned down all rural electrification
bills, despite the fact that funds will be available from federal sources, and citizens of Ohio would not have to pay an additional cent
in taxation to make benefits of electricity available to thousands of rural people," declare the farm bureau leaders at Columbus. "The farm bureau has striven to obtain the passage of such a bill and will continue its efforts to make funds
available."

A cooperation finance system has been declared by officials of the organization "to be the brightest jewel in the crown of cooperative agriculture." They have been active in urging farmer-owned financial institutions and have stated that a cooperative finance system
would be "owned and controlled by its members—thousands of them—
and would be operated, not for the profit of a few, but for savings to many."

During the first two hundred seventy-five years of secondary education in the United States, the sole object of the schools was the development of the intellect. All the students' learning was gleaned from textbooks. That still is the central theme of our educational set-up. The regular curriculum of the modern high school includes a great variety of general, specialized,
and required courses which tend to broaden the mental capacity of the student.

But a great change has come into the philosophy of modern education. It is no longer felt that booklearning is sufficient. Democracy demands participation from every individual. The high school, then,
as the ideal training place for life,
is this increasingly complex society
of today should give to the student
not only an opportunity to acquire knowledge but also a chance to put that knowledge to practice.

This change did not come about suddenly but was the result of much thoughtful observation.
Youths with common interests instructively bank together. Students had been doing that but almost invariably either with the disapproval
or, what is nearly as bad, the indifferent tolerance of the faculty.
These outside affairs were considered a waste of time which should have been spent in study. But administrators more and more came to see that the student was getting fully as much out of these extra activities as he was from his classes.
They saw possibilities of realizing
their dream of making the schools
a social training course. They began to encourage these struggling groups and to appoint faculty

OPPORTUNITIES

Perhaps nothing is more apparent than that the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of our high schools should not rest
with a backward look or even with contemplation of the current scene arose; toward the solution of the new problems the schools began to shift their program. Subjects which concerned practical life
pressed for a place; the pendulum started swinging toward what is called social studies. The three R's were not enough. In the organization of the life of the school
emphasis began to be placed on the social and creative. As a result the school has transformed itself into a laboratory where practical duties of citizenship are emphasized.

In contrasting previous programs
of education with the present day
we can see the aims are different.
The purpose of previous education
was to guarantee literacy and to raise the general level of intelligence. The specific work was to prepare for college. Former programs were concerned with the art of learning. Today the main concern is the art of living.

By social studies we mean such subjects as economics, history,
civics, geography, sociology, and orientation. They have to do with life, aspirations, institutions,
thoughts, and the policies of the nations of the world. Today these social studies play an important role. From grades one to six such subjects as the making of the community and the growth of the United States are attempted; from grades seven to nine the history of the world before 1697, since 1697, and communities and national activities
are taught. The high school cur-

graphy and civics, United States

Ex-Librarian Dies

COLUMBUS, June 7.—John Henry Newman, 84, three times
state librarian, died at his home here last night after an illness of seven weeks. Newman was a Democratic candidate for secretary of state in 1924, 1928 and 1930, but was defeated each time. He was dismissed from the state service during his third term as librarian
when the state library board abolished the job. Newman lost a court fight to regain the post.

Infuriated Elephant
Tramples Girl, 9

CROOKSTON, Minn., June 7.—
An infuriated circus elephant,
which charged the length of the
"big top," upsetting seats and spreading panic among 1,000 persons, killed a nine year old girl spectator and left a score of persons nursing injuries today.

Margaret Ann Francis, who gaily
had led her younger sister, Geraldine, 7, to seats in the bleacher section a few minutes earlier, was trampled by the beast and died
soon after in a hospital.

Injuries to the others, trapped
when the bleachers collapsed, were confined mostly to cuts and bruises.
Geraldine, unhurt except for a few
scratches, was unable to remember how she was parted from her sister
in a wild scramble for safety.

County Case Load
In Relief Heavy

With the Columbiana county relief case load now standing at approximately 4,200 cases, it was reported today that additional case
workers would have to be employed,
in order that the "load" carried by some of the investigators could be reduced.

It has been pointed out that when a case worker has between 200 and 300 cases to review monthly, especially in rural communities,
a correct analysis of the relief situation is hard to obtain.

"Additional case workers would more than pay for the cost of the work county relief headquarters
announced today.

Every effort is being made to clear the relief list of "chiselers," it was pointed out. While a number of "chiselers" have been uncovered and their cases adjusted,
charges are to be filed against others within the next week, investigators said.

Three From Salem
Win O. S. U. Degrees

COLUMBUS, June 7.—A class of 1,350 men and women will receive degrees at Ohio State university's commencement Monday, June 10, in the stadium.

Baccalaureate will be held at 3
p. m. Sunday with President Charles F. Wishart, College of Wooster, as speaker. Class day exercises will occur Monday morning, President George W. Rightmire's annual reception to the graduates and their friends Monday afternoon, and the commencement at 6 p. m.

The class includes the following
from Salem:

Master of Arts—Harry P. Ulicny.
Bachelor of Arts—Frederick Guilford.
Agriculture—John G. McConnell.

Lisbon Waterworks
Project Studied

LISBON, June 7.—The board of public affairs here has been informed that the State Department of Health will submit the names of six sanitary engineers, one of which is to be selected to prepare plans
and estimates for the improvement of the local waterworks system. The village council has approved the project.

It is believed the improvement
will cost approximately $15,000, and that 45 percent of the cost can be secured in a federal loan. The remaining 55 percent of the cost will be obtained through the sale of waterworks bonds.

Lisbon Widens Its
West Lincoln Way

LISBON, June 7.—Three large maple shade trees were cut down
in West Lincoln Way, when the work started here this week widening the street in front of the David Anderson high school.

The work is being completed as a FERA project, and will cost about $2,500. Top soil from the space between the south sidewalk and the curb was saved, and used to complete a terrace on the west side of the high school site.

When this project is completed,
FERA crews will begin "rounding"
a number street intersection corners.

Potters Set Date
For Annual Meeting

EAST LIVERPOOL, June 7.—The National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, parental union of skilled ceramic workers, has set Monday, July 8, for the opening of the annual convention, which will be held in the N. B. O. P. auditorium here.

Will's Amazed

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., June 7.—Two kinder amazing statements in the papers today.

The president was supposed to be quoted as saying, "Unless the Wagner bill and the Guffy Snyder bill passes, it might be necessary to call out the militia."

The other was before the great Federation of Women's Clubs convention at Detroit.
Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, who has represented the Federation
in Hollywood, reported: "Pictures have been cleaned up, and it was by the help of the solid middle classes, and not by the intelligentsia. Society classes are the dirtiest minded people
in America."

The official record received a couple of pretty tough blows
from two different sources.

IN A VITAL SPOT

In any plan to terrorize the United States preparatory to seizing the government, control of the sources of electric power would be included. Generating plants are vital spots in a nation which depends heavily on electricity.

Toledo's condition Wednesday was a demonstration of what can be done by shutting off electricity from a populous district. Every person who used electricity was affected. There were no lights, no power for factory motors and no current for electric stoves and refrigerators.

The electrical workers whose strike paralyzed Toledo knew what would happen. They were aware of the inconvenience suffering and danger that would be caused by their strike. In their hands, or the hands of the committee which acted for them, they had a powerful weapon to use against their employers.

They could not use it without inflicting widespread damage on thousands of persons who were connected in no way with their dispute. They reasoned that popular resentment would be leveled against their employers, thereby assisting them to get a favorable response to their demands, chief of which was a 20 percent increase in wages.

Toledo electrical workers may be wrong. There is a theory, having nothing to do with the right of collective bargaining, that strikes need popular support to be successful. It is rarely a good rule to inflict injury on outside parties. Toledo strikers are gambling that the public will blame their employers for the paralysis of an entire region, deliberately induced to force settlement of a labor dispute. If they have guessed wrong, the United States will be one step closer toward formulation of a policy establishing control over organized labor commensurate with the control now exercised over employers of organized labor. Until that happens, the United States cannot have a truly effective organized labor movement.

ALBATROSS AND EAGLE

The ancient mariner who killed the albatross was made to wear the dead bird around his neck in punishment. President Roosevelt seems destined to endure the blue eagle in a similar position.

He revealed Tuesday he will continue NRA if possible until next April. Its jobholders will have two duties to perform. The first will be collection of data in defense of the recovery act while it remained in effect, also collection of information on what happened in industry and business when the act ceased to be effective.

The second duty will be prowling through the records and activities of firms wanting government contracts to insure against violation of NRA principles on government jobs. President Roosevelt hopes to make the federal government set an example for private industry in retaining such principles as minimum wages and abolition of child labor.

Thus, President Roosevelt voluntarily is preventing the disappearance of the blue eagle. Incidentally, he is demonstrating the fact that governmental bureaus, once created, do not pass out of existence. But there is also an involuntary association between Mr. Roosevelt and the symbol of the regimentation of business attempted under the recovery act.

A visitor from Mars would find it hard to understand why the President should be held responsible for the collapse of an experiment which only two years ago was endorsed enthusiastically by his countrymen. Originally it was their idea as much as it was his, but it is a tradition here on Earth that someone must be a target for the bricks of discontent, and in the United States the target is the chief executive. Mr. Roosevelt, himself, has made a habit of blaming his predecessor in office for the great depression. He cannot complain now because he is being punished, particularly since he seems reluctant to let his particular albatross be thrown overboard and forgotten.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

NEW YORK, June 7—Thoughts while strolling: West End Avenue is the most European of all New York streets. Ideal for a murder or the abode of hidden genius. For a walk in the evening with the only girl or a midnight fire. Behind the trees must lurk kidnappers. A block from Broadway, it seems a mile.

Add names that come up like a hiccup: Eddie Duchin. Also Jimmy Cagney. Gelett Burgess calls them The Walzing Mice of Literature i. e. Those who can go but a little way before stopping and waltzing a lot of incomprehensible verbiage. That captivating sprinkle of white in Mary McKinnon's hair.

So many new restaurants—and most of them empty. They probably don't say "Here's dust in your eyes!" in the middle west bars any more. America's pessimist No. 1: Clarence Darrow. Nobody can look through one like Justice Hughes. Or grin so amiably as Kelsey Allen.

Look alike: Bob Hague and John F. Hyman. Drinking from a jug name: Outzon Borglum. Postmaster Farley's go-funny eye—like Dreiser. Al Jolson and Patsy Kelly. Any time I see gypsies along deserted street, I go into a skedaddle. Billy Gaxton is also the top low collar wearer.

The screen's ace drunk—Hugh Herbert. Those idlers around the Seaman's Institute—silent, pipe-smoking, staring. If Basil Durant were bald, he could pass for Orville Wright. Things were tough in 1920, too. Kin Hubbard wrote: "Ex Pash is selling fish eggs by the dozen."

Jack Curley, the old Roman of athletic promotions, was in California with his wife and daughter when, as the result of a sudden call to return to New York, he booked passage on the ill-fated plane that crashed, killing Senator Cutting and four others. An hour before time to go to the airport, and he doesn't know why, he canceled his passage and came by train. He came back to town telling it innocently enough and found he was just one in a million who missed the fatal ship.

No popular tune has ever touched the established New Yorker so sentimentally as the swingy "Side-walks of New York." More than any other refrain it caught the city's heart-beat and hurdy-gurdy motif. Al Smith, of course, gave impetus to the popularity by making it a campaign song. The author was recently found penniless, forgotten, suffering—and one wonders why an opulent Tin Pan Alley did not learn of such distress? Anyway, Al Smith did, and gave him proper hospitalization and will see that he no longer feels the sting of neglect from a city he so immeasurably cheered.

All mandolinists—of the George Ade Fables era—take a secret pride in the international success of the peppery Dave Apollon. He has plink-planked his way to high favor in most of the music halls of Europe and on the continent as well as from coast to coast in America. And has revived an instrument that was as extinct as the dodo. When he appears in a city, music teachers who have scratched the mandolin from their curriculum restore it. Apollon, Russian born, is not only a master of the mandolin, but in many ways is about the most versatile "piff-awner" surviving vaudeville's evaporation.

The mandolin mania struck our town in the early 1900's. Ed Womeldorf, hardware clerk and the only mandolinist, became Prof. Womeldorf with evening classes in a studio in the Lupton Block. Social status was established by the number of ribs or mother of pearl frets in a mandolin. Almost every girl suffered a love-lorn mandolin trio under her bedroom window each moonlight night. And then George Ade turned out that jubilant fable about Eustace and his mandolin—and every mandolinist felt suddenly stifled. The art was drowned in a back-wash of giggles.

Incidentally, the bicycle has never been so evident since it went out as this summer. Central, Prospect and Bronx parks are fairly awash with costumed bikers—from jaunty bereted juveniles to bewhiskered fellows who suggest the pedaling papas of the Paris Bois. Several of the sidewalk cafes have curb bicycle racks.

One of Peter B. Kyne's grander stories concerns the grouchy old codger who sat on his high porch during the passing of a circus parade. When an elephant with a beautiful Egyptian lady in the howdah came into view, he began to sway to the clarineted Oriental refrain. And toppled over the porch edge. As they rushed to pick him up, he snarled: "I'd be all right, if the danged women would let me be!"

THE STARS SAY

For Saturday, June 8

A lively and eventful day is forecast from the prevailing lunar and mutual figures. A sudden event may be precipitated with whirlwind velocity and may change the entire course of current events and have the effect of recasting the future destiny. It may be concerned with writings, travel, sports, youth, or their interests, but in all there is a menace of intrigue, subtlety, duplicity. Likewise, there will be tenacious obstacles to be removed before these tremendous operations may bear fruit.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for an event of major importance coming into their lives during the year, and with the force of a whirlwind. This abrupt visitation may change the entire future plans and activities, although tenacious obstacles must first be disposed of and treachery and intrigue vanquished.

A child born on this day should have rare talents and fine success in life.

Anesthetics Used In Surgery

IT WAS not long ago that everybody dreaded visiting a hospital to see a sick friend. The very smell of the place was upsetting. Everything is different now.

The odor of ether used to greet the visitor when he entered the front door. That smell no longer permeates the corridors of the hospital. Neither the sick nor their visitors can complain of disagreeable anesthetic odors.

As a matter of fact, ether is now seldom used as an anesthetic. It may be combined with other gases, such as nitrous oxide and oxygen, but rarely is it used alone as it was when first discovered in 1846. For years following that discovery it was universally used and until recently every anesthetic was administered by the inhalation method; that is, by breathing in the gas.

New Drugs Discovered
Several new drugs have been discovered. It is possible even to give these by mouth and produce complete anesthesia. Some of these new agents can be used by injection into the skin or into the blood vessel. Very small doses are sufficient to give freedom from pain.

Perhaps one of the greatest strides in the modern use of anesthesia has been in connection with childbirth. Today, few institutions permit the expectant mother to suffer from unduly prolonged labor pains. An anesthetic in some form is given.

Not long ago I read about "avertin," a drug alleged to be successfully used in maternity cases. This procedure differs markedly from what used to be called "twilight sleep." After the administration of this agent the patient becomes drowsy and soon falls asleep, the effect lasting for forty-five minutes to an hour and a half. Such substances in no way interfere with the normal progress of labor.

Spine Method Popular
I am often asked whether spinal anesthesia is a safe procedure. This method of producing freedom from the pain of an operation has become exceedingly popular within recent years. It is employed by many leading surgeons. It is especially valuable in those cases where the lungs or heart will not stand the strain of the old-fashioned inhalation anesthesia.

Persons who are afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis and require surgery can now be operated upon with far greater safety when spinal anesthesia is used. Of course, this method of procedure can only be used in selected cases. The choice of an anesthetic should be made by the surgeon, of course. He is familiar with the physical defects and limitations of the patient. Fortunately, due to the great advances made in this field, he has a great variety of drugs from which to choose.

A Review of the Day's News

By Arthur Brishane

THE FINDING of a $20 bill, serial number L-12129816-A first identified among $200,000 for the Weyerhaeuser boy, who made the kidnappers thought Government agents say they had the kidnapping case "to break open in 48 hours." An obnoxious station agent of the Union Railroad who took in "hot money" as detectives call it, gives fairly good description of the individual who used the $20 to buy ticket to Salt Lake City.

KIDNAPERS WHO wrote the pressed father and mother, say, "we are educated, you will not be able to find us," may find that they have the wrong kind of education.

THE government already knows the names of six men named in the kidnapping, including a leader, a drug addict described the kidnapped boy as the "pot-smoking man."

THE man who wrote the note about how well educated he was, drugs to which he is addicted have given him what the police call "delusions of grandeur."

THE man who lived opposite the Weyerhaeuser, practiced bootlegging, said to have supplied relatives of the kidnapped boy with liquor in prohibition days, or more of the bootleggers may be in custody even now, although official announcement is lacking.

THE authorities might keep a prisoner and give him a chance to do "little talking," before telling relatives.

ENGLAND HAS a murder-robbery-suicide combination that has caused British eyebrows to rise. About one per cent of an inch, American reporters call it "The Snyder-Gray" case. A young woman, Alma Victoria Ratbury, married to a rich old man, is accused of helping her 19-year-old chauffeur, George Percy Stoner, murder the husband with a mal-

THE chauffeur, drug addict, alleged to have been regaled by his male employer with champagne and to which were added gifts of jewelry and silk pajamas, will be hanged in eleven days. The wife is acquitted, but chose not to go. She walked to the edge of the River Stour, stabbed herself five times in the chest, jumped into the river, died. Death gets all of the handle. It's a story to make any Englishman say "well, really."

TODAY CAPT. J. WALKER, OSS, editor of the New Orleans States, celebrates the end of his sixth year in newspaper work. New Orleans, Louisiana, the New Orleans States and its staff celebrate with him.

Captain Ross, a useful, conscientious servant and enlightener of his city, having finished the fifty years of newspaper work, says the hardest, can look forward to other years of greater usefulness.

He is, perhaps, the only editor in America with fifty years of newspaper experience on one newspaper. His work has been done on the New Orleans States, which speaks for that newspaper's intelligence. Wise newspapers keep good editors.

KIPLING WAS right. "The feeling of the species" is dangerous. Sometimes, an old woman of seventy entered a butcher shop to buy another lady, picketing the shop in "consumers' strike to reduce prices knocked the old lady unconscious. High prices are deplorable, but there should be limits to one's treatment of another, even in a good cause.

ON THE other hand, the female of the species is occasionally tenacious. Mrs. Coducci, who shot her husband to death was freed by a jury because he deserved shooting for beating her, now talks only of the dead husband's good qualities. "He was a good-looking man," she, mournfully. She thinks he might be better now," and "I like you never miss a person unless he is gone." She even thinks he should be a help with her boy, who "just like him, hot-tempered."

AMERICANS WON $1,500,000 on the Irish Sweepstakes. How many millions were wasted in winning of comparatively small amount, fifteen millions or more, no one knows. How many bogus sweepstakes were sold, nobody knows. Americans won seven out of ten major prizes, each worth $149,000, a wise arrangement, since America offers the best field for those that play upon human foolishness. ## Mary Lou Wins Lanny's Heart Again With a Batch of Strawberry Jelly

Mary Lou making jelly for Lanny Ross

NO arguments for Mary Lou—famous radio sweetheart of Lanny Ross—about the way to a man's heart. It may be his stomach and it may be his sweet tooth. But rather than take any chances, Mary Lou aims to please both by making a fine strawberry jelly for Lanny, which she calls Lanny Ross jelly.

Mary Lou is a fine cook, and makes a strawberry jelly her grandmother would envy. It would have taken her grandmother hours to make the same batch of jelly that this busy radio star makes in half an hour. For Mary Lou, old-fashioned in many ways, is modern in the way she makes jelly, using only the ripest strawberries and preparing them in the short-boil way.

Here is the jelly Lanny Ross's mouth is watering for:

2 boxes powdered pectin

To prepare juice, grind or crush thoroughly about 3½ quarts fully ripe berries. Place in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice.

George O'Brien is a genial cowboy and guide at a swanky dude ranch in his new picture, "The Cowboy Millionaire," coming to the Grand theater Saturday and Sunday.

Edgar Kennedy is his pal and together they own a mining claim which they plan to work after they leave the dude ranch.

On their last assignment at the ranch they are sent to meet new guests, and to thrill them O'Brien and Kennedy stage a fake holdup. Evelyn Bostock, a new English actress, plays the part of one of the guests. With her are her aunt, played by Maude Allen, and her screen fiance, Alden Chase. The fake holdup, instead of amusing the new guests, makes them highly indignant and although inwardly admiring O'Brien, Miss Bostock is very insulting to him.

Alden Chase, whose interest in Miss Bostock is concentrated on her money, learns of the mine owned by O'Brien and Kennedy and plans to acquire it at a ridiculously low price. Chase persuaded Kennedy in the absence of O'Brien to sell the mine and the entire party leaves for England, where the deal is to be closed.

The rest of the picture concerns O'Brien's attempt to win the girl with whom he is in love and his struggle to save his mine.

When O'Brien returns he hurriedly packs to follow the crowd, hoping to arrive in time to prevent Kennedy from selling. Meanwhile Miss Bostock learns of the deal and Chase imprisons her before she can warn Kennedy.

George O'Brien discovers her hiding place and together they go to Chase's lodge where Kennedy has just signed the bill of sale. A fight ensues and our hero saves his mine and wins the girl in a terrific fight.

Tonight and tomorrow the State is showing the picture "Private Worlds" starring Claudette Colbert. Liberty gave this film four stars.

HOME MAKING HELPS

Better Living Hints Seen in Bride's House

TODAY WE are paying another visit to the Bride's House on display under the auspices of House Beautiful. It is the annual contribution of this magazine to the art of better living.

This year the kitchen is attracting as much, if not more, attention than any room in this beautiful house. The room is long and narrow, like a hallway. So, all the working equipment is set against one wall, virtually as one unit, comprising refrigerator, work counter, sink and dish washer, serving counter and electric range. Such an arrangement save many steps, makes the preparation of food and clearing up one continuous performance.

The range has ample storage space, enough for all pots and pans. The refrigerator is a marvelous affair with an electric ice cream freezer, a special water cooler and revolving ice box dishes of glass.

Walls in Glass

The walls, without equipment, are in a black everlasting glass, the material that is becoming increasingly popular for bathrooms. Its use in kitchens is bound to become known and copied. The upper part of the wall is in white, banded with metal. The metal is also the surface for the working counters. Drainboards and sink are backed by a sound-deadening material. The wall cabinets are white, lined in red, with wood and metal chairs painted a similar red.

300 Years of American High Schools
Is Theme of Commencement Orations

Don Hammell

Established academies, the graduates of which in turn established more academies. Benjamin Franklin started an academy that was partially maintained by public funds around 1750. This was the first semblance of the free public high school.

As time passed the academies spread becoming more independent from religious denominations and more democratic in form. Our colonies became a nation and the demand for a good education grew.

Soon our nation became a haven for every nation of Europe. The industrious Germans came over, the hardy and laborious Dutch, the educated English, the thrifty Scotch, the French, and other peoples.

From this promiscuous breed the people called Americans has arisen. It is a wonder a system of education was demanded to amalgamate these citizens? About 1835, we see the first of the great educators in history coming to the front. A champion of free public education, a man to whom the rise of secondary school owes much. This person was Horace Mann. The people were willing to accept his views.

They needed more than grammar schools to educate citizens to run government. The high school was the answer to their prayer. Devoted to the Civil War high schools supported by the public appeared all over the north. Thus the first great cornerstone was laid in the high school edifice.

But let's drop the past. Let us now look at the present; the citizens and the high schools of 1935. First we shall take the citizens. The citizens of the U. S. today are of a greater variety than that of any other country in the world. Practically every race in the world is represented in America today.

Every race has an equal chance. There is no discrimination against the Greeks, or the Jews, or the Italians; all have a chance for an education in our great land of the free. Think then of the gigantic problem confronting our secondary schools to educate thoroughly a great melting pot of the world!

Let us consider our present high schools. Many of our high schools are beautiful buildings; new buildings with modern conveniences. Some of them contain eight or nine thousand students. There are today over 20,000 high schools in America and more than 6,000,000 students. These schools are marvelous results in turning out the leaders of the world tomorrow. Our high school has been well called the people's college and so it is a free college open to every person in the United States. The high school is expanding its curriculum daily and has indeed enough courses to suffice the ordinary needs of life.

So much for history and so much for our beautiful high school buildings. What is the chief aim of the high school? That is the concluding and main discussion of this talk.

The high school here is established to take boys and girls of this great melting pot of ours and to raise them to a level that is attained by the citizens of no other country in this world. The citizens of this country are above those of any other country you care to mention. Thus our country has come up from a struggling colony of Great Britain to the greatest nation in the world.

What makes a nation great? The citizens, the people who run the government and the country! What makes good citizens? Education helps make citizens. In the United States the high school is that education. From that seed planted in Massachusetts in 1635 grew the American high school and it has been spread and cultivated throughout this country. The high school is that institution which makes our citizens leaders of the world and which places them far above the average. The high school puts the finishing touches on the American boys and girls. It takes them during adolescence and raises them in an environment which produces the quality of citizenship for which the United States is famed the world over. One has only to compare with our own the citizenship of countries without the blessing of free public high schools to realize that secondary education is one of the bulwarks of freedom.

Joyce Chatfield

history and government, recent economic and social history. The present program has far to go before it can be said to be successful. There are obstacles to be overcome.

Teachers must have more specific instruction; they must be accorded academic freedom from political tampering and control; they cannot let their own prejudices interfere. There will be need for more materials; and there are the difficulties in test making.

We need social studies. Latin and geometry do not seem of major importance to a host of people facing unemployment. The growing complexity of relationships demands an increased emphasis on social science instruction. Unless social knowledge and skill are forthcoming, the foundations of all cultural interests will crumble.

In order to insure the development of judgment, broad understanding, and right decision, high school students should be trained for economic, social, and political life. The prosperity of the world depends on civilization's advancing along the line of the scientific training of all classes of citizens. Social training ranks next. Social progress is dependent on social intelligence—intelligence adequate to deal with present complex society.

The social morality of a few can save a nation but the social shortcomings of many may wreck it. There are constructive agencies at work. Sociology, for instance, deals with group life, group problems, and is concerned mainly with portraying social intelligence.

Political training demands a knowledge of one of the other phases of life. Today there is a large per cent of our population that does not go to the polls, it takes rousing campaigns to bring out a three fourths vote. A large per cent vote for those they know nothing about, except that Mrs. Jones says "He is good." Political training must be taught in order that intelligent voting may be secured; the school of social studies is the laboratory.

Social studies bring closely to us a knowledge of present day problems and world needs. With education in social intelligence there will be campaigns against graft, deceit, crime, and other wholly undesirable conditions in society today.

The high school student must know and understand the causes and effects of such problems as prohibition, unemployment, government, economy, inflation, taxation, science and the machine age. He must be able to form and have ideas on such matters. He must prepare to make social, civic adjustments and to interpret economic life. The classes in history, civics, economics, etc. furnish the chance for the students to discuss and to express viewpoints on these curricular problems.

Through the studies of the social sciences education in citizenship will be attained. Citizenship does not mean merely being a resident of the U. S., but it means being a constructive resident—a helper in the building up of society. The efficient citizen is one who is open-minded; is able to get along with his fellows; he abides by the laws laid down; takes a stimulating interest in social progress, and in the mastery of independent thinking. In the study of social sciences one learns that narrow mindedness should play no part; that in order for a community to succeed, it must be composed of law abiding citizens; that to better the present and oncoming generations interest must be taken in world problems.

We see that training for life work, whatever it may be, includes economic, social, cultural, and political instruction which must be offered in the educational program. Social studies will be more and more extensively taught because this training is practical in the sense that the instruction given is evident in making a higher standard for citizenship and in developing tastes in the arts of living. Before popular government can reach a high degree of efficiency, it must afford in the schools the specific training for citizenship which it later expects its mature citizens to use with power.

Mildred Woods

physical body. This is the school of the future. There will be books in this new school of ours, but the books will not have the authority of our conventional text books. For chiefly there will be contact—with things, persons, movements of life. Our young people will use their eyes, hands, and independent brains. As we seek to build in the spirit of our modern world, we shall distrust an exclusiveness of second-hand knowledge. We shall wish our children and our young men and women to handle things, to see them, to make them, to know people, to meet and master life-situations. We shall seek to build up the kind of mental integrity that grows out of direct contact with the realities of life.

Skills mental and physical, will be learned of course. Ignorance and awkwardness will be regarded simply as an inability to fit into the fascinating order of things. There will be no thought of teaching mathematics, science, and the rest simply as isolated subjects. Rather they will be taught as the means whereby man equips himself so that he may, in all kinds of ways, co-operate intelligently in the world of which he is a part.

History, for instance, will be studied with the forward look; economics will rid itself of its pretense to finality and will be a research into still better ways of organizing the resources of production and consumption; political science will hold no brief for any established political devotion but will take the present only as a point of departure for a conceivably more adequate future. The habit of conceiving of new and more adequate ways of doing things and thinking about things will be developed.

Again, there will be a respect for the unique differences present in each individual. For there will be time to watch each individual grow, to remove hindrances, and to supply the means of personal development. There will be no conspicuous singling out of superior ones, no building up of ugly conceits and pathetic inferiorities. Always there will be a life in and with the group, a commonness of enterprise, a togetherness of triumphs as well as of failures.

Counselors who guide and never dictate will be the leaders and the teachers in the high school of the future, to draw out what is strangest and finest in every student. Here may be the place for the future to make its bow to the past and to the present. Good teachers have always been and always will be. Probably no human being who has gone long to school has failed to come sometime under the influence of a teacher who could inspire him to learn. The exceptional teacher of today will be everywhere present tomorrow, for the career of teaching will be a privileged one and only the finest of talent will be enlisted.

At the present time we are face to face with the problem of what to do with adults. Not only will it be exceedingly difficult in the near future for children under 20 years of age to secure employment but our adults will have much more leisure. The 25-hour week is just on the horizon. Provision must be made for exercise of this leisure and for the continued education of adults both for vocational and recreational ends. It will be necessary to provide means whereby the adult groups can meet regularly in the schools for the study of governmental and local problems, for play and recreation, for means of expression in the shops and in all of the fine arts laboratories. Thus, parents and children will grow up together. They will both be active in the common enterprise of finding wisdom about life's possibilities. The time will come when every school will have its parent-groups eagerly at work as well as its child-groups.

The first beginnings of all these new ways of education are with us now. Already there is the determination that the spirit which has so largely prevailed in education—dreary compulsion, sulky compliance—shall disappear. There is a demand that education be a joyous process, for the simple reason that joy is the only soil out of which fine personality can flower. There is the demand, also, that the work-life and the play-life shall be lived in the group. And there is the demand, finally, for a more immediate and vital contact with realities, and for a type of thinking, therefore, which shall be more ruggedly honest.

So we see that the school of today is the foundation upon which the school of tomorrow will be built. We see that the pattern of the new education begins to shape itself. In that pattern we see the inspiring give and take of work in the group; a togetherness of young and old; a deeper integrity of thought by contact with realities; a spirit of inventive eagerness. If education builds on this pattern, it will assuredly become a powerful directive force in the building of a far more adequate civilization.

pointed to best and to dictate but rather to advise. In this respect principals were very careful to preserve the main objective of these activities—to give the student an opportunity for unsolicited self-expression in his own way in the fields which interest him.

The range of extra-curricular activities has been gradually expanded until it covers nearly every field in which the student is interested. Probably the most prominent, at the present is the department of athletics. From scattered scrub teams playing occasional games, this department has developed to a place where teams practice under specially trained coaches and play regular interscholastic schedules before large audiences. This program which gives the normal, healthy student a chance for physical development is carried on at considerable expense. The income from the major sports is more than sufficient to maintain such a variety of minor sports as will give every student an opportunity to participate. The non-athletic activities are of more recent development and are not so well known to those outside the school. However, they are as important as part of our educational system as the regular class room schedule.

Each group is organized for a definite and distinctive purpose. Some are formed to furnish the student opportunities for practically applying facts learned in classrooms, others to permit him to delve more deeply and freely than he can in classes, into subjects which he likes. Language clubs aid him in acquiring a proficiency in a foreign tongue. Conversation with others, scientific groups perform interesting experiments beyond the extent of regular class work. Dramatic clubs and class plays offer training and experience in a field outside regular courses. The band, the orchestra and vocal choruses, which have been partially incorporated into the regular curriculum, give the student a chance to enhance his musical appreciation and ability under talented supervision. Not the least important of these activities are the parties, banquets, and other social functions sponsored by the classes and clubs at which everyone mixes freely and merrily.

A comparatively new movement that is having far reaching effects is student government. I say new because, though it has been in actual practice for about fifteen years, it is still in the experimental stage. Administrators have carried out the plan to varying degrees. Many have entrusted the responsibility of maintaining discipline and planning school projects entirely to the hands of a student board elected by the whole school. These boards seldom mix with law in meeting out punishments but students respect their decisions nevertheless. There can be no doubt but that a student government, properly organized, with the support of the student body, is the best preparation for citizenship yet tried. Every effort should be made to prepare every High School for Student Government.

Educators are steadily putting new ideas to the test in an attempt to further the principles of extra-curricular activities—to draw the student out and to tempt him along lines which lie within his interests and abilities. In this set-up the teacher occupies a key position. It is his privilege, his duty to encourage, to advise, to exhort the student on to associations which will aid him in attaining a worthwhile goal.

It is the conviction of the sponsors of this social training program that if the student advances through high school with an open mind, alert to seize these opportunities, he cannot but have benefited by it.

Each group is organized for a definite and distinctive purpose. Some are formed to furnish the student opportunities for practically applying facts learned in classrooms, others to permit him to delve more deeply and freely than he can in classes, into subjects which he likes. Language clubs aid him in acquiring a proficiency in a foreign tongue. Conversation with others, scientific groups perform interesting experiments beyond the extent of regular class work. Dramatic clubs and class plays offer training and experience in a field outside regular courses. The band, the orchestra and vocal choruses, which have been partially incorporated into the regular curriculum, give the student a chance to enhance his musical appreciation and ability under talented supervision. Not the least important of these activities are the parties, banquets, and other social functions sponsored by the classes and clubs at which everyone mixes freely and merrily.

So we see that the school of today is the foundation upon which the school of tomorrow will be built. We see that the pattern of the new education begins to shape itself. In that pattern we see the inspiring give and take of work in the group; a togetherness of young and old; a deeper integrity of thought by contact with realities; a spirit of inventive eagerness. If education builds on this pattern, it will assuredly become a powerful directive force in the building of a far more adequate civilization.

Wonderful News For JELLY MAKERS
SEE WHAT AMAZING NEW SURE-JELL DOES!
Gives two-thirds more jelly or jam
... Perfect results with any fruit.
Much better flavor and texture, too!

1 ONLY 1/2 MINUTE BOIL...
for jellies; one minute for jams. Just think of the time you save! You can actually finish a whole batch of jam or jelly in less than 15 minutes after your fruit is prepared! That's one reason women everywhere are so delighted with this new powdered pectin product.

2 TWO-THIRDS MORE JELLY
or jam... Because of that extremely short boil, none of the juice boils away. So you actually get two-thirds more jam or jelly... as much as 10 glasses from the same amount of fruit that gave you only 6 glasses the old, "long-boil" way. What a saving in money!

3 PERFECT RESULTS with any fruit; finer flavor, too... No more worry about failures. Sure-Jell eliminates uncertainty. With this wonderful new pectin product, all fruits jelly perfectly. The flavor is much finer, too. Short boiling retains all the real flavor of the ripe fruit—no "boiled-down" taste!

MONEY BACK OFFER
Buy two packages of Sure-Jell. Use one. If it does not do all we claim for it, just take the other package back to your grocer. He will refund the full price of both packages. (Sure-Jell is a product of General Foods. You can buy it at any grocer's.)

Another victory in church league competition was chalked up by the Baptists yesterday, who beat the Methodists, 8 to 4, in an exciting game.

Bailey, center fielder for the Baptists, smacked out a homer during the battle.

Tonight the Mullins team faces the Hardwares and Washingtonville will meet the Trades Class in more Class A tilts. Church league games will be between the Christians and the Trinities and the Presbyterians and Friends. Summaries:

WHOSE WIFE? A CYRUS K. MANTEL MURDER MYSTERY

by CLADYS SHAW ERSKINE AND IVAN FIRTH

SYNOPSIS

A man who said he was Wilbur Renton phones the police soon after midnight when he sees a man apparently trying to kill a woman on the penthouse roof of an apartment across the street from his own twenty-first floor window. A police radio car speeds two officers to the scene, they are whisked up the elevator, and the colored operator lets them into the living room of a Mr. Vane who is seemingly sleeping in a chair and denies knowledge of any trouble when aroused. When his wife is missing from both boudoir and bath, Vane becomes hysterical and soon lapses into a daze. Meanwhile, the police find the body of a nude, headless woman on the terrace. When they arouse Vane from his stupor and accuse him of killing his wife, he denies the charge. He falls from a blow to the face and is knocked unconscious when his head strikes a brass fender. Before he recovers, Inspector Ingles and Medical Examiner Gilbraith arrive from Headquarters. The former recognizes Lawrence Vane as a noted portrait painter and old friend in whose innocence he is confident. But after Vane is confronted with the grisly corpse, Inspector Ingles orders his arrest as "a material witness in connection with the murder of your wife."

CHAPTER IV

Three weeks before the night of the terrible storm and the murder on the roof of Mr. Lawrence Vane's penthouse apartment, Wilbur Renton and his friend, Roger Thornley, were having one of their usual chatty visits together in the spacious lounge of the Athletic Club of which both were members.

Renton was in a very bad temper and was letting off steam to Roger, who for once felt that his complaints were justified.

"Well," Renton said, "this is a hell of a fine home-coming! Here I've been away for a hunting trip up in Canada, and the first news I hear when I get back is about this impossible marriage of Isobel Mackenzie and Lawrence Vane! Why the whole thing is worse than ridiculous. It's tragic, I tell you. . . . I'd just as soon believe that a fish wanted to be baptized by total immersion as that Isobel wanted to be married—the immersion is no novelty to the fish and the Lord knows that the state of marriage, shall we say, has never been a novelty to Isobel."

"It's a great match for Isobel," replied Thornley. "Vane is unquestionably the coming man in his field. He has done some wonderful work lately. Even the Isobels of this world must settle down some time or other. You can bet your sweet life, she knows what she is about."

"I'll agree that she has feathered her nest," said Renton, "but I'm not so sure of her knowing what she's about. You can take it from me that it won't last. It just can't. There will be an almighty crash and pretty soon at that Vane idealizes the woman and she has been clever enough to fool him into thinking that she's worth it. Some way or other she has managed to keep him from finding out what her life has been. . . . We all know that she's just plain no-good clear through. Wait till he finds her out!"

"Isobel won't wait," laughed Roger Thornley. "She will do a midnight flit with someone else if she sees a crash coming. You see if I'm not right. She changes a lover as quickly as a chameleon changes color, and she's absolutely shameless."

"Well, anyway," Renton came back at him boastfully. "I'm still a bachelor."

"Yes," Roger acknowledged, "and a lot poorer one than you were before Isobel got hold of you. I'll bet she took you for plenty cash. She would. Easy for her, too. She's one of the most beautiful women I ever saw, and thoroughly unscrupulous. The combination's hard to beat when it comes to getting cash out of rich playboys."

Both men sat quietly smoking for a while, each one occupied with his own thoughts.

Those of Wilbur Renton were far from happy. The saddest part of his unfortunate affair with the beautiful and notorious Isobel was

"Yes," she mocked, "it's Betty, in person, none other—and you are Wilbur Renton, the prodigal, returned to do penance?"

the fact that it had served to break up his official engagement to Betty Potter. Betty was such an independent little thing. She had a good job on one of the big newspapers as society editor, and free-lanced for others on the more spectacular events and happenings of the Big City. He thought tenderly of Betty now. She was such a dear, but so proud and clean-cut in her own self-respect that she would not tolerate certain things in the man she loved. He winced as he remembered the night she had caught him dining tete-a-tete with Isobel in one of those secluded little nooks that spell the clandestine at first glance. Isobel's lurid reputation fully justified little, spit-fire in breaking her engagement to him and indefinitely and finally giving him the gate. Roger interrupted his somber thoughts.

"Why don't you go over and try to make it up with Betty?" he asked as though he had been able to follow the thoughts of the other.

Renton looked at him quizzically. "You know that little red-head," he said, "she's not easy once she's down on you. And after all she had all the reason in the world," his voice dropped. "She's a wonderful girl," he said softly.

"Go ahead," urged Thornley seriously, "you can try at least."

Renton straightened up in his chair. "I will," he cried with a new determination in his voice. "I will."

"Good," Thornley was pleased. "She's moved you know, queerly enough, she's taken a place right under Vane's roof studio," he grinned, "so you can wish the happy pair all married bliss at the same time."

"I tell you I'm finished with that woman," cried Renton, thoroughly annoyed. "As if she hadn't done harm enough already without marrying Vane. She'll ruin him, of course, in one way or another."

She'd be better off dead, and everyone certainly would be better off without her.

Thornley whistled softly. "You don't like the lady, do you?" he asked sarcastically. "Still, you'll have to acknowledge that she is gorgeous and has great charm, and to be a lover of hers places a man in high (though overcrowded) company."

"She ought to be dead!" Renton repeated viciously.

Thornley arose, stretched himself. "Well, Wilbur, let me know how you get on with the fair Betty," he said. "My wife will be happy if you can manage to patch that up again."

Renton looked at his friend curiously as he mentioned his wife. Most of their set knew the story, and a great many felt sorry for quiet, unobtrusive Mrs. Thornley. She had been before her marriage an unknown, very pretty girl named Millie Mackie, who had landed in the front row of the chorus, where her lovely figure would show to the best advantage for the entertainment of the T. B. M. She knew little of her parents and cared less. One of the Tired Business Men who came to forget his troubles was Roger Thornley, son of a successful contractor, brought up in the building business, and already, although still young, a success. Roger went backstage the first time he saw her and after a swift courtship they were married. But Roger was not such a success as a husband as he was a contractor, and she soon regretted that she had changed her name and her station in life to become the rich Mrs. Roger Thornley. When Roger suddenly developed a mad passion for the notorious siren Isobel Mackenzie, she was glad. At least that meant that he would leave her alone. Then Isobel married the artist, Lawrence Vane, and Roger changed for the worse. He began to drink heavily, and Millie was subjected to gross indignities because of his drunken rages.

Roger broke the thread of his thoughts. "Millie and I are going to Seattle on the 12th of the month," he said, "come up and see us. We're motoring all the way."

"Why Seattle, of all places?" asked Wilbur casually.

"We've got mills of our own there and I have to get out there and look them over. Millie has been sort of crochety lately, finds fault with nearly everything I do. I thought a long trip and will get her away from here for quite a while."

"Sure, I'll be there," said Renton, "I'll be seeing you in the mean time, though."

The very next day Renton telephoned Betty Potter and after a great deal of eating humble pie, managed to extract from her an invitation to a tete-a-tete dinner in her new apartment on the evening of November 15.

When the 15th arrived it came in a most inauspicious mood. For as Wilbur made his way to Betty's apartment, a storm had broken with a fury that was unequalled even in New York, that city of sudden and drastic changes of weather.

He arrived at her door at a quarter to seven and was admitted by old Suky, her colored maid.

"Good evening, Mr. Renton," she beamed at him. "It's a long time since you've been up to see Miss Betty."

"Too long, Suky," he replied pleasantly. "I'll have to make up for lost opportunities."

He stood for a moment on the threshold of the living-room and feasted his eyes on Betty. She was really adorable. Slender, young, red hair made into dancing flame by the light of the November fire over which she was stopping. She was dressed in a clinging frock of emerald green silk that brought out to best advantage the creamy pallor of her skin.

He gave an involuntary exclamation and she turned quickly.

Her black eyes flashed, and then softened to a friendly look.

"Hello, Wilbur," she said simply, and held out one firm little hand.

"Betty," he stammered, "Betty—dear."

She tilted her head to one side, and twinkled up at him where he towered above her.

"Yes," she mocked, "it's Betty, in person, none other and," she added, "you, if I mistake not, are Wilbur Renton, the prodigal, returned to do penance?"

He strove to meet her lighter mood.

"Yes," he assured her gravely, "it is indeed the prodigal, and mighty glad to be allowed to return, too."

She laughed gaily, her full lips turning up at the corners in an impish fashion.

"Okay for the prodigal part," she said, "but not so quick on the 'return, young man' . . . but come, we'll discuss that after one of Suky's best dinners."

Ohio Assembly Passes 228 Of 905 Bills Offered During Its Session

By JOE S. DEUTSCHLE
Associated Press Staff Writer
COLUMBUS, June 7.—The 91st General Assembly apparently had a mind of its own.

When it quit the regular session after a delay of 12 days, it had approved 228 new laws out of approximately 905 which were thrown into the legislative hopper.

Of these, four could be attributed directly to the recommendations of Governor Davey. Nine others suggested by the executive in his message to the assembly were thrown into discard.

Bills which the governor recommended, and which were adopted were:

Adopted Measures

Beautification of state highways by creating small parks.

Payment of current taxes in 10 monthly installments.

Payment of delinquent taxes in installments.

Permit the state conservation department to retain all funds collected by it from licenses and giving the commission the right to fix the closed season on game and fish.

Administration measures which were not included:

To declare a two-year moratorium on the payment of the principal of all bond issues.

To reorganize the system of state government and give the governor absolute control over the reorganization, hiring and firing of all employees in state departments regardless of their civil service rating.

The creation of a bureau of criminal investigation and identification, with the agents appointed by the governor.

To increase the liquid tax one cent, the proceeds to be used for the financing of old age pensions.

A continuation of salary cuts for state employees.

Giving the people the right to buy their automobile license tags on an installment plan and at the same time reducing the fee to a flat figure and restoring automobiles to the personal property tax duplicate.

Decentralizing the state industrial commission and providing for the appointment of junior examiners to hear cases.

A decentralization of the state utilities commission with junior commissioners to hear cases in various parts of the state.

Follow Davey's Wish

The governor in his campaign recommended that either the liquor tax be wiped out or that the state's mark up of 30 per cent be dropped, but in no event should the state attempt to retain both. However, just before the senate approved the liquor control bill, the governor relented and asked that the legislature let the state's income from this source alone. His wish was followed.

A goodly portion of the legislation that went through and was finally submitted to the governor was more or less local in nature.

The most important measures approved by the assembly had to do with the payment of taxes and method of refunding outstanding bonds as well as the payment of taxes.

Most important of these probably was the bill by Rep. William McCulloch (R-Darke) which will permit counties to put levies which formerly were between the 10 and 15 mill levy outside the 10 mill levy. Under the constitutional amendment adopted by the voters last year, the total millage levied against real estate was reduced from 15 to 10 mills. This put a number of counties in a precarious condition to carry on normal functions. The McCulloch bill will permit the commissioners to put these levies outside the constitutional limitation and is expected to free considerable funds for local operating levies.

Of major interest also was a bill to create more millage inside the 10 mill limitation. During the next four years it will permit the taxing authority of any subdivision, with the approval of the tax commission, to issue bonds to refund outstanding bonds which mature in the next succeeding fiscal year. This does not include bonds issued in anticipation of taxes which otherwise would be payable from taxes levied for that year. The principal of the refunding bonds in no case may exceed the amount which is estimated as "fix charges" and current expenses.

Important School Bills

Two important school bills were given legislative approval. After more than two years of bickering the legislature finally gave the schools a foundation program.

This program calls for a minimum of $45 for elementary pupils, $67.50 for high school students and reorganization and consolidation of public schools.

Although the bill is expected to require at least $8,000,000 more than is now going to the schools, no provision is made in the bill to raise this additional money. It is expected to be one of the chief subjects of a special session which Governor Davey has said will be called probably in September.

Some school men claim the foundation program can be financed without additional funds. Others insist that additional revenue must be raised.

The Armbruster-Lawrence bill to refund outstanding highway bonds over a period of 15 years was another controversial issue which cleared the hurdles after a two-year effort.

As it now stands only the larger counties of the state will benefit from the bill. It provides for a refunding of county township and municipal road and highway bonds issued prior to Jan. 1, 1935, for road work. The bonds will be retired from a "bond retirement fund" to be made up from 10 per cent of the 47 per cent which now goes to counties from the motor vehicle registration fund.

The bill was characterized on the floor of the senate as a "steal" by Sen. James M. Matthews (D-Clark) who made a last minute effort to have it reconsidered. He contended it would work a hardship on counties which already have paid their obligations.

Commissioners' Job

Poor relief is to be cared for in the future by county commissioners who will have authority to issue bonds against the money derived from the collection of the 1 per cent utilities excise tax. The state relief commission which went out of existence after a row between Governor Davey and H. L. Hopkins, federal emergency relief director formerly had this authority. The state tax commission also was given the right to make transfers of state funds to the federal relief administration to meet the cost of caring for Ohio's indigents.

Enabling legislation was enacted to give the state authority to accept federal money from the public works administration for the elimination of grade crossings and improvement of highways and any funds that are set aside for the construction of buildings and other improvements in the state.

Motorists were accorded two important pieces of legislation in the form of reductions in motor vehicle license fees and the drivers' responsibility law.

Auto license fees were fixed at $7 for cars up to 25 horse power; $10 for cars between 25 and 31 horse power and $16 for all over 31 horse power. In addition, license plates for next year will not have to be obtained before April 1.

The drivers' responsibility act gives the motorist the right to have one accident, before it affects him. However, if a judgment is obtained against him and he does not meet it, he will be required to obtain insurance, post a bond or other security before he will be permitted to drive on the streets.

Increase Road Patrol

Instead of the present 60 uniformed state highway patrolmen that are operating on the state roads, 120 will soon appear. The legislature gave its approval to doubling the uniformed force and abolishing the jobs of some 48 inspectors.

All in all the legislature appropriated nearly $98,000,000 for operating the state during the next two years and for the payment of sundry claims which have piled up against the state during recent years. This measure also destroyed the salary cuts which were voted on state employees by the legislature two years ago.

In arranging salaries, the legislature did not overlook itself. Members voted to increase their salaries and that of the lieutenant

Grandmother at 30, Advises Early Marriage

The youngest grandmother in the United States is not from America. She is Mrs. Otto Ellers (right), of Honolulu, who was married at 14 and is a grandmother at 30. With her are her daughter Mrs. Azaline Booth, who was married at 13, and her year-old grandson. She advises all girls to marry before they are sweet 16.

governor by $1,000 for each year. Instead of the legislature drawing only $1,000 a year, beginning in 1937 he will be paid $2,000 for each year.

Old age pensions were taken care of during the last few minutes of the regular session when the assembly adopted a bill agreed to by the governor and legislative leaders to appropriate $2,500,000 from sales tax receipts for the payment of the pensions during July and August and $125,000 for the administration of the fund.

With the dying of the legislature another commission went out of existence. The assembly refused to approve a bill by Rep. John Q. Carey (D-Lucas) which had the unofficial backing of Governor Davey to set up a new state milk marketing commission. The present commission is scheduled to go out of existence July 1.

By the same token another bill adopted by the legislature is in jeopardy of being overturned by the state supreme court before it can become effective. It would prolong the life of the Ohio recovery administration. The bill seeks to extend the ORA's life until next April, but action of the U. S. supreme court in declaring dead the parent of the ORA—the national recovery act—is feared the Ohio supreme court which has several test suits on the same act pending before it may hold it unconstitutional.
